FOREWORD

This exhibition of the works of the Canadian Group of Painters is the seventh since its formation twelve years ago.

More than half of this period has been spent in the actual shadow of war, its prelude and aftermath. Artists no less than others have made their contribution in their own way—many in the services, some recording the war abroad, others at home and a thousand other activities in the field of education, therapy and entertainment. Now they are prepared to share their experiences and their productions as usual, with others.

After the last war, about 1920, the Group of Seven was formed. It was one of the expressions of a national urge to interpret Canada and a symbol of the spirit abroad at that time. After this struggle in 1945 the signs point not towards a personal or even national desire to express merely an environment, but to a definite and compelling demand on the artist in a more organic world to interpret a wider view, to see deeper and further than others in a world in which space, time, and the larger patterns of living have a meaning.

"Freedom to create" was never written into the charter of human aspirations officially—but the artist has taken it, as always, as part of his way of carrying on the never ending efforts to reveal form, colour and design in a changing world.

The Canadian Group of Painters profess no fixed academic or modern allegiance to any school or style. Their membership ranges from one end of the country to the other. It seeks the experimental, the adventurous, whether in the remoter realms of the abstract, or a lively commentary on the colours and movements of the visual graphic world of to-day.

They are glad to see their battle worn painter members returning with gifts of stern realism of nations in conflict. Some of these by courtesy of the Historical Sections of the Army, Navy and Air Force, are on view in this exhibition. Also, as before, several new exhibitors are invited to share this showing.
